ed Texas hoe and nial." the Earth he , the

The national debate over race has intensified in the last eight months as the killings of Michael Brown, Eric Garner and Freddie Gray (among many others) by police o cers have sparked nationwide protests and exposed strong disagreements about the extent of racial injustice in modern America. To help us grapple with these crucial issues among our own community, the Boisi Center invited three theologians to discuss the intersection of race, religion and movements for social change. Billed as a "campus conversation," the March 25 event drew several hundred students, faculty and sta to the large Devlin 008 auditorium, and connected them to a broader, semes-

 $a2.5\text{``uisr sios a.6(e)-}5.2\text{(m t)}11.8\text{(u)}05\text{ 0.1977a}4.12.4\text{(l 7.1(i)-}8.5\text{(a)-}22.3\text{(l c7 t8(i r)}8.6\text{(e)}n)}2\text{i C)-}9\text{m}$ a 9(m)-17.9amnl c3.92(i n)10.2(tm)13nu1.2 two faces of political islam

religion and u.s. foreign policy

Shaun Casey, a professor of Christian ethics who is currently serving as special representative for religion and global a airs at the U.S. State Department, spoke about his o ce's e orts to promote pluralism, human rights and global stability.

Shaun Casey, special representative for religion and global a airs at the U.S. State Department, spoke at a Boisi Center event on April 9 about the State Department's e orts to take religion more seriously in its dealings with foreign states. Casey, currently on leave from Wesley Theological Seminary, explained that understanding the religious convictions of others is a high priority for Secretary of State John Kerry (a proud BC alum) and the Obama administration in general. The administration's e orts are aimed at engaging religious actors and communities in order to advance pluralism, human rights and global stability.

Casey described the evolution of the State Department's O ce of Religion and Global A airs and its e orts to further the administration's goal of engagement. His o ce advises the Secretary of State on issues connected to religion. It also acts as an entry point for religious leaders Shaun Casey, special representative for religion and global a airs at the U.S. State Department, addressing a Boisi Center event on April 9.

being a priest	in the	public	square	down	under

Undergraduate research assistant evan goldstein will graduate this May with a B.A. in theology and a minor in philosophy. In August he will begin a masters program in Theology/Ethics at the Union Theological Seminary in the City of New York.

After two years at the Boisi Center, graduate research assistant yael levin hungerford